Fort Henderson has attained international recognition for its connection to Her Royal Highness, The Duchess of Sussex, Megan Markle. Markle, who married Prince Harry of Wales in 2018, is the great-great-great-great granddaughter of Joseph Betts, a former slave who fought and was captured with the 110th U.S. Colored Infantry at Fort Henderson in the Battle of Athens, September 24, 1864. The ALCA plans to memorialize the service of Betts and his comrades by creating the Fort Henderson Memorial, which will include monuments, historic interpretive markers, and a park with a walking train around the fort outline; and the Trinity History Center, which will include an archives and interactive museum exhibits that preserve and share the story of Fort Henderson and Trinity School. This is the second and third phase of the project that began with the successful re-opening of the former Trinity School as a self-sustaining community center, the Pincham-Lincoln Center.
